

Martin becomes new SEHS dean

David S. Martin assumed his new responsibilities as dean of the School of Education and Human Services (SEHS) on July 1.

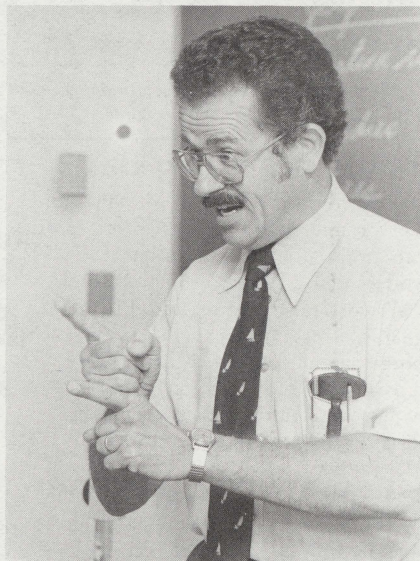

Dr. Martin—who holds a Ph.D. from Boston College, a C.A.S. and an Ed. M. from Harvard, and B.A. from Yale—was formerly the coordinator of the undergraduate program in teacher education at SEHS. He came to Gallaudet in 1980 from Dominican College where he headed the Education Department.

For the past three years, Martin has been conducting research involving the teaching of cognitive skills to hearing impaired secondary school students.

Dr. Martin replaces Dr. Thomas J. Landers as dean of SEHS. He will administer and lead one of the largest schools on campus. The SEHS currently encompasses six academic departments. Its programs focus on professional and career preparation, and its faculty is widely recognized for extensive experience and expertise in education, counseling and human services.

The school offers B.A. degrees in teacher education; B.S. degrees in physical education and in recreation and leisure studies; M.A. degrees in education of the hearing impaired with a variety of specializations, in school counseling and in rehabilitation counseling; M.S. degrees in educational technology; Ed.S. degrees in instructional supervision; and Ph.D. degrees in special education administration.

Dr. Martin is the author of numerous articles in education journals.

Louis Markwith

Markwith notes 'promise and peril' of raising nongovernment funds

After his first month on the job as vice-president for College Relations, Louis Markwith says that he "is reinforced each day about the rightness of my decision to come to Gallaudet."

Markwith assumed his new responsibilities June 4, leaving the executive directorship of the University of Georgia Foundation. During his five years with the foundation, its endowment increased nearly four-fold.

"The hardest thing so far, my biggest personal frustration, is my inability to communicate as effectively as I'd like to do with deaf faculty and staff," said Markwith in an interview. He added that he has an excellent tutor to help him overcome this barrier.

The College's newest vice-president has devoted considerable time to getting to know all College Relations employees. "Everybody is important to this organization," he said. "For me to manage effectively, I need to know everybody well. I hope that one of the positive effects of this is that each individual will have a rewarding work experience here."

Markwith said that it's important for College Relations employees to understand their role on campus. "By itself, College Relations has no reason to exist," he said. "We offer no courses; we do no research. We're a service organization, and our success depends on our ability to build on Gallaudet's positive image. That's what attracts students, attracts talent and attracts funds to the campus."

One of Markwith's top priorities will be fundraising, including some administrative reorganization geared to increasing the College's general endowment of approximately $3 million. "Money is important," he said, "but more important is what that money means for the College—to maintain integral parts of the life of the College, to generate new programs, to provide scholarships for disadvantaged students, to obtain new equipment as technology changes and to fill gaps between traditional funds and internally generated funds."

The vice-president noted that his fundraising for Gallaudet will differ somewhat from campaigns he directed at the University of Georgia. "On the one hand, this College is more appealing to donors than most educational institutions. That is the promise.

"But there is also a peril. The negative side is potential donors who say 'Why ask me? The government meets all your needs.' We must overcome this notion, making clear that the federal pocketbook is only so deep. We must convince people of the very real need for funds to augment the College's ongoing programs and to create new ones," he said.

Markwith said that he will not appeal to people's charity but to their philanthropy. "Charitable people expect little or no social dividend or payoff to society. Philanthropic people expect that society will benefit in some way from their gifts. Gallaudet, through its graduates, offers a vital benefit to society. Our stewardship of donated money and time requires that we maximize this benefit."

Markwith, 40, is married and has three sons ages 16, 15 and 10. He is residing on campus now and planning a mid-August move for his family from Georgia to a home in Fairfax County.

Cindi Olson is the vice-president's secretary. They can be reached at x5843.

Faculty fill key convention roles

President Jerry C. Lee headed a delegation of nearly two dozen members of the campus community at the joint convention of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf (CAID) and the Conference of Educational Administrators Serving the Deaf (CEASD) held June 23-27 in St. Augustine, FL.

The combined 52nd biennial meeting of CAID and 57th annual meeting of CEASD was hosted by the Florida School for the Deaf and Blind. The theme was "Focus on Excellence."

While the Gallaudet contingent was a small part of the estimated attendance of 600, its influence was great. Gerilee Gustason (English Department) concluded her two-year term as president of CAID and now becomes president of the CAID/CEASD umbrella organization, the Associations for Education of the Deaf. Robert Davila (vice-president for Pre-College Programs) rose from president-elect to president of CEASD.

Gilbert Delgado (International Center on Deafness) was the featured speaker at the convention's plenary session. Four campus faculty members served on the Joint Program Committee—Dr. Gustason, Dr. Davila, Dr. Delgado and Dr. David Updegraff (Pre-College).

More than a dozen faculty members gave presentations or led courses on topics ranging from administrator effectiveness to student development.

Speechreading book released

Three college faculty-members—Harriett Kaplan, Scott Bally and Carol Garretson—are the authors of Gallaudet College Press's newest book, "Speechreading: A Way to Improve Understanding."

The practical, consumer-oriented book is geared for use by and with the estimated 20 million adults and children in the U.S. who have some degree of hearing impairment.

The authors describe the nature and process of speechreading and note its benefits and limitations. The book, which includes illustrative exercises, clarifies commonly held misconceptions about speechreading skills.

The 152-page paperback book is available for $13.95 at the College Bookstore.

Coffee: Grounds for acceptance

Most College applicants have to wait for a letter from the Admissions Office to know whether they have been accepted.

David Tossman of Olney, MD found a faster way.

Staff in the President's Office opened a carton of coffee bags from Cory Food Services, Inc. of Rockville and found a note. It read "David Tossman packed this!! I hope to get into Gallaudet this fall!! Thanks and enjoy your coffee!!"

Impressed by the young man's creativity, Provost John Schuchman checked with the Admissions Office and found that Tossman qualified for admission to both the College and its Honors Program.

Dr. Schuchman wrote to Tossman, welcoming him to the College "as one of our outstanding freshman students." He invited Tossman to come by and meet Dr. Lee and himself this fall.

Odds are that Tossman will be offered a cup of his own coffee.

Convention roles

tiveness training and interdisciplinary assessment to parenting issues and child, sexual and substance abuse.

"I think we had an excellent convention," said Dr. Gustason, "and the presence of so many Gallaudet people contributed much to the success of the meetings."

In addition to an exhibit promoting the College and its products and services, the College also sponsored a Sunday reception for all participants and a Monday banquet for nearly 100 alumni and friends. Dr. Lee's inspiring banquet speech, "What's Right with Gallaudet," was followed by a message from CAID's Jack Duncan on the challenges facing Gallaudet and other educational programs for deaf people in terms of federal support.

Some alarming data

According to the Risk Management Task Force, there were 277 fire alarms on campus between October 1, 1984 and March 31, 1985. Of that total, 167 were false alarms and 110 were valid alarms—meaning that someone suspected a fire. Nine actual fires were discovered, seven of which were attributed to carelessly discarded cigarettes.

Cued speech program

The Cued Speech Adult Program was held June 24-28 at MSSD. The annual summer program is cosponsored by the Cued Speech Office and the Office of Extension and Summer Programs. This year 27 participants came from as far as Houston, TX and Ontario, Canada.

Among Ourselves

Ernest Spriggs, acting director of the Physical Plant Department, has been accepted as a full member of the Association of Professional Energy Managers.

Five Pre-College instructors were among the 70 presenters at the first annual Special Education Software Center Conference held last month in Alexandria, VA. Judy Berglund (career development software), Sandy Hart-Davis (teacher-designed software), Peg Reichard (software for teaching sewing), Rae Ann Wuestman (chemistry software) and Nancy Cowan (word processing for job applications) were assisted by MSSD students in their demonstrations. Nancy Fones, MSSD assistant principal, was a member of the conference's advisory board.

Jan Richardson of IDEC has been selected to chair the newly formed Washington area chapter of the Association for the Development of Computer-Based Instructional Systems. The group focuses on the development and implementation of computer-based training systems and includes school-based as well as federal systems and private sector training interests.

Bill McCrone and Marita Danek of the Department of Counseling have contributed chapters to "Counseling Deaf People: Research and Practice," a new book published by the University of Arkansas.
